The Corruption Perception Index 2015

Corruption delays economic development, impedes democratic processes and severely affects justice and the rule of law. None of the European states is shielded from the effects of this phenomenon.

Transparency International launches today the 20th edition of the Corruption Perception Index (CPI) — a global aggregate index that includes up to 12 different sources, which captures the perceptions of business people and country experts about the level of corruption in the public sector. The scores given to countries reflect the perceived degree of corruption: 100 points means not corrupt at all, and 0 points means very corrupt.

In Romania, CPI was calculated for the first time in 1997, and in 2012 it was included in the National Anticorruption Strategy as a performance indicator for it. Romania's proposed target for 2015 was to register a score of 63 points - equal with the medium score of the European Union states.

Today, CPI 2015 ranks Romania on the 58th place in the world ranking, with a score of 46 points, compared to a medium score of the European Union states of 65.36 points.

Although the progress is not substantial compared to the previous year, Romania's sustained efforts in the fight against corruption begin to be visible in the evolution of the country indexes. In 2014, Romania had only 43 points and was ranked only on the 69th place among the world's states, only for it to climb 9 places in this year's ranking. It must also be noted that in 2015 the Romanian Index is, for the first time, on an ascending trend.

The reforms that made this growth possible were also due, in no small measure, to Transparency International Romania's efforts in the past 15 years. Together with the TI Romania results quantifiable in amounts of laws, publications, citizens and institutions supported, the most valuable achievement is that today integrity is a national value on the citizens' agenda.

Starting from the premise that the private sector plays a key role in moulding the way society responds to the corruption phenomenon, and that a clean, principled and transparent business environment can contribute decisively to Romania's development, TI Romania's immediate answer to the CPI result is to launch the Integrity Certification for Companies Program.

The program rallies itself to the recent commitment made by Romania's Chamber of Commerce and Industry and involves a concerted effort in three steps, beginning from making a commitment to values and principles adapted to each company's organizational culture. At the second level, the program continues with the construction of the operational framework of implementation of the ethics and compliance management system, and on the last step can be found the company's investment in ensuring integrity along its supply and distribution chain. A fourth component, crossing all others, is the development of the system of verification, self-evaluation and reduction of lack of integrity risks.

In this program, TI-Romania will offer companies technical assistance to follow all three steps, publicly certifying at the end of each the existence, in that company, of the internal mechanisms necessary to prevent integrity incidents from taking place.

At the same time, faithful to its commitment to an honest Romania, without corruption, Transparency International Romania proposes to dedicate its expertise and energy in the next 5 years to:

- Guide the people's attitude and mentality toward the development of a social culture of integrity — through anticorruption training and judicial counselling for corruption victims, corruption witnesses and whistleblowers
- Develop anticorruption ethics and compliance programs for the business environment, promoting integrity standards th agreement with international and European best practices
- Develop sustainable programs to strengthen the anticorruption capacity of public institutions by capitalizing on the expertise already present at their level and multiplying the best practices validated by the Romanian public administration
- Strengthen Romania's position, regionally and internationally, as a source of good practices regarding efforts and determination to fight corruption through judicial means, as well as the judicial corruption itself.
